

Cycling Prague to Mont Saint-Michel: Bicycle touring Europe

After three years of cycling trips in the Indian subcontinent, Colombia, and a trip from Prague to Venice, adventure cyclist Tomas Belcik returns to Europe with the idea of riding in his own version of the Tour of France. As every avid cyclist, he dreams about cycling around France, but his experience of travel in France makes him skeptical about suddenly liking the country. He decides to ride from Prague to the coast of the Atlantic Ocean. As usually, he rides without any idea where he may overnight; most of the nights he wild camps, no reservations necessary. He prefers uncertainty, essentially an unplanned and a vague journey, a style of travel he considers a prerequisite to an adventure. Letting the daily rides unfold as they may, he is sightseeing from the saddle. He rides across Bohemia, Germany, Luxembourg, and a slice of Wallonia. When he enters France, he heads south through Lorraine, Champagne-Ardenne, Burgundy, and then west along the Loire to Brittany and the coast of the Atlantic. He makes the Mont Saint-Michel his symbolic destination, and upon reaching it, he rides east across France to Strasbourg. His experience of France is unlike anything he expected, and the French become his favorite people. Cycling Prague to Mont Saint-Michel is an epic 3,400-kilometer ride, a travelogue and a guide for an avid road cyclist and a touring enthusiast. Included are GPS tracks as well as an extensive photo essay of each stage. If you ever thought of cycling France, the book will inspire you to go. As Tomas says, Stay light to nil on preparation and you shall discover what is worth discovering! All else will take care of itself.
