

Secrets from the Cabinet of Curiosity: Dinosaurs, deep space and the quest to avoid television mayhem!

It was a dream job. For over three decades, television producer and director, Peter Brown, got paid to travel the world making documentaries about his lifelong passions - adventure, science, dinosaurs and deep space - but, as he's the first to admit, he only survived in broadcasting by the skin of his teeth! Television Doomsday was always lurking and seemed to stalk him wherever he went. This is the true inside story of an extraordinary period at the BBC - revealing, for the first time, the untold tales of mischief and mayhem out on location and what really went on behind the scenes at BBC Television Centre. Throughout his career, which includes directing BBC's Blue Peter and producing epic space and dinosaur extravaganzas, the author kept mementos of his adventures - treasured objects that are real connections with the incredible events, places and people he encountered along the way. The collection in his Cabinet of Curiosity has become something of a time capsule illustrating a fast-changing world. From TV scripts and storyboards scribbled hastily on beer mats to jungle blowpipe darts and a jar of simulated Mars dust from NASA, every object has an amazing story to tell. Some are moving, others are quirky, but all give a unique insight into a life in the fast lane fraught with perils. There's a deeper story too. Secrets from the Cabinet of Curiosity follows a personal journey and reveals how influences in childhood can be nurtured and focused to fulfil lifelong dreams and ambitions. This is a heart-warming true story of adventure and bad behaviour told through the objects in the Cabinet of Curiosity.
