

Just Another Victim

Just Another Victim is the true story about the treacherously brutal rape of Jewel, an 18-year old girl, living in New York City in 1965. The night was supposed to be a carefree night of fun with her best friend Janice and her boyfriend along with a young man, Maurice, who was an acquaintance of the couple. What started out as an innocent double date changed Jewel's life forever. The four young people went to the cemetery to hang out thinking they would have an adventure. The cemetery was so large that they decided to split up and explore different sides of it. Instead, Jewel was taken to a remote area there and repeatedly raped by Maurice over several hours. This story serves as a warning to women about their vulnerability when going with men whom they aren't acquainted with into places alone. Jones also intertwines her own sister's brutal rape into the story to show how real this is for all women. Jones recreates that night from accounts she heard from family members. Her message is loud and clear: never put yourself in harm's way because it can cause you great pain that can last forever.
