

Images of Dublin: A Time Remembered

Like Robert Doisneaus Paris, Bill Doyles Dublin is a defined milieu. In these photographs that span half a century, from the 50s to 90s, Doyle gives us a composite view of a city and its inhabitants, capturing the spirit of a time and place, a pre-boom Dublin still haunted by the ghosts of history. From the narrow alleyways and back streets of the north inner city to the leafy environs of the south side, these beautiful, dramatic pictures constitute a singular photographic achievement. Children at play on the cobbled streets of Smithfield; lovers embracing in St. Stephens Green; horse-drawn milk carts on their early morning deliveries; Anthony Burgess captured on Bloomsday in 1982-these are just some of the remarkable images of one of Europes great capitals. Doyles gentle, humane vision and wit permeate each frame, affirming the dignity of the subject and the immanence of the object held in the cameras eye.
