

Prince / Picasso

Over the past two years, Richard Prince (born 1949) has been working on an intensive assimilation of Picasso, producing a succession of collages and canvases that directly dialogue with the modernist masters oeuvre. For Picasso, as for Prince, the theme of the female nude is an abiding motif--he never lets go of the body, as Prince observes--and Princes latest nudes are a typically energetic mixture of appropriation and wonderfully crude, irreverent interjection in the fashion of Duchamp, deploying such materials as ink jet printing, oil crayon, pastel, acrylic, graphite and charcoal. The black-and-white photographs of female nudes are derived from recently published anatomy how-to books, and endow Princes homages with a graceful, rhythmic plasticity. This elegantly produced, linen-bound volume (with a bellyband that doubles as a folded poster), published for a 2012 exhibition at the Museo Picasso in Malaga, presents these works for the first time. It includes a brief interview with Prince and critical commentary by Jose Lebrero Stals.
