

The Ancient Allan

Excerpt: ...You are dismissed. Let the answer be given early lest you also should be dismissed, O Peroa, said the man with insolence. Then he turned his back upon the prince, as one does on an inferior, and walked away, accompanied by the herald. When they were gone and the doors had been shut, Peroa spoke in a voice that was thick with fury, saying, Hearken, all of you, to the words of the writing. Then he read it. From the King of kings, the Ruler of all the earth, to Peroa, one of his servants in the Satrapy of Egypt, Deliver over to my servant Idernes without delay, the person of Amada, a lady of the blood of the old Pharaohs of Egypt, who is your relative and in your guardianship, that she may be numbered among the women of my house. Now all present looked at each other, while Amada stood as though she had been frozen into stone. Before she could speak, Peroa went on, See how the King seeks a quarrel against me that he may destroy me and bray Egypt in his mortar, and tan it like a hide to wrap about his feet. Nay, hold your peace, Amada. Have no fear. You shall not be sent to the East; first will I kill you with my own hands. But what answer shall we give, for the matter is urgent and on it hang all our lives? Bethink you, Idernes has a great force yonder at Sais, and if I refuse outright, he will attack us, which indeed is what the King means him to do before we can make preparation. Say then, shall we fight, or shall we fly to Upper Egypt, abandoning Memphis, and there make our stand? Now the Councillors present seemed to find no answer, for they did not know what to say. But Bes whispered in my ear, Remember, Master, that you hold the Kings seal. Let an answer be sent to Idernes under the White Seal, bidding him wait on you. Then I rose and spoke. O Peroa, I said, as it chances I am the bearer of the private signet of the Great King, which all men must obey in the north and
