

Mutant Women of Berlin

I fell in love with Claudia the night she told me she had murdered her father, then her mother. We were in my bed. I didn't know if she was telling the truth, but I knew she could have done it, and I knew she could kill me too if she wanted to, and I grabbed her and turned her over and had another go at that granite body of hers. I didn't understand then that she was a mutant, but it was the first hint I had that women in Berlin were different. There's a saying about Berlin: You don't go to Berlin to go to Berlin, you go to Berlin to get away from somewhere else. When Eric T. Hansen came to Berlin from US, he found out that a lot of women had ended up here who fit in nowhere else. They were the most fascinating women he had ever met. Mutant Women of Berlin is a love letter to a certain kind of woman most people don't usually write love letters to. Mutant Women of Berlin is a non-fiction report of about 30 pages. Eric T. Hansen grew up in Hawaii and first visited Germany as a Mormon missionary. He returned there to study medieval German literature in Munich and in the nineties left the Mormon church to become a freelance journalist for publications such as The Hollywood Reporter, The Washington Post and Die Zeit. In the 2000s, he turned to writing popular non-fiction books about German culture and mentality and his writing partner Astrid Ule, including the bestsellers Planet Germany, Deutschland-Quiz, Norgeln and, most recently, the thriller Neuntoter, under the name Ule Hansen.
