

The Successful Fitness Model

The successful fitness model can be found on the cover of magazines, working trade shows, or as a paid representative for sports and supplement companies to name a few ways fitness models get to combine their love of fitness with their job. Many people attempt to break in to the fitness model business but don't know where to start. Just having a great body does not guarantee success. Do you need to compete? How do you market yourself? Do you need to use a professional photographer? How do you pick one? What are some tips and tricks for getting into the magazines? Is doing nudes a positive or negative for your career? What about the internet? Unlike traditional fashion modeling, fitness modeling has many routes to success and is a very different business and industry from traditional modeling. Those are just a few of the essential issues this report covers giving practical real world advice on how to make it as a fitness model. Will Brink brings his decades of experience as an industry consultant, judge, and trainer/coach for fitness/figure models and competitors in this practical report. In addition to Will's advice, top fitness/physique photographers Eva Simon and Bill Dobbins give their thoughts to would-be fitness models on how to avoid common pitfalls often suffered by those looking to make it in the industry.
