

Timm Rautert: No Photographing

In 1974 the young Timm Rautert travelled to Pennsylvania to photograph those who would normally not allow themselves to be photographed: the Amish, a group of Anabaptist Protestant communities. Four years later Rautert returned to America, this time to the Hutterites who live so stringently by the Ten Commandments and the bibles restrictions on images that they have their identity cards issued without photographs. Both these two series were influential on Rauterts later work and No Photographing brings them together for the first time.
