

Budapest (Belhaven World Cities)

Traces the historical development of Budapest over a 2000 year period--from its emergence as an important European capital during the Middle Ages to its changing geopolitical role after World War II. Focuses on such key themes as the role of geographical location in various stages of urban development, environmental problems, demographic patterns and the impact of industrialization. Concludes with an examination of Budapest's long-term master plan regarding alternatives for its future and political development.
